relates to a rotary winding system which is useful for winding webs of material such as textile goods and spools of thread on a drum or other rotating support member. More particularly, the invention relates to such a rotary winding system wherein it is possible to precisely control the radius of the wound package by means of a pivotable winding head. In rotary winding systems of the type to which the present invention is directed, it is necessary to wind the material onto a winding drum by taking up and securing the material as the drum rotates. Preferably, the exact radius of the package to be wound should be controlled so that the package can be wound with the end of the package precisely positioned near the end of the winding drum. Prior rotary winding systems of the type described are shown in the
